

Caring for an exotic pet was more difficult to manage than I had originally thought it would be.

In this essay, I will briefly outline my experiences in living with and helping to raise children with special needs.

We communicate with others everyday and we never stop to think what would happen if we were no longer able to communicate with anyone, our whole lives would be different.

I quickly learned through my transitioning from high school to college I learned that I should've kept doing what I love to do instead of stopping myself because I came up short.

Marijuana is the kind of drug that makes you dull and want to be isolated from friends, family and society.

Back then, I was able to get by simply from showing up, doing work when it was a necessity and just being an indifferent spectator towards the directions my life took. I was young; I was naive. As soon as I began my education in university that all changed.

All I truly knew was I was scared I wouldn't be able to play sports anymore and would have to give up on my dream of becoming a college athlete.

Through my experiences in learning and coping with a mental disorder I want to teach the lesson to others to understand that not everyone deals with everything the way you might, do not judge someone or give someone a hard time because they may seem apprehensive to do something others might do so easily, you never really know how others brains work and react to things.

The best gift anyone can have is family and although two of my family were gone, the family that was still gathered around the living room was my favorite gift of all.

Through obtaining my driver's license I learned its importance and gained appreciation for having a license.

Through my experiences as a young woman in today's image-driven society, I have learned the value of accepting myself for who I am.

This concludes that my thesis is doing the right thing is crucial even if it upsets your friends or family.

There are many different reasons that influence our career choice.

Even though my experience has not been expanded, my decision has been to fight for my dreams and over come any obstacle that faces me.